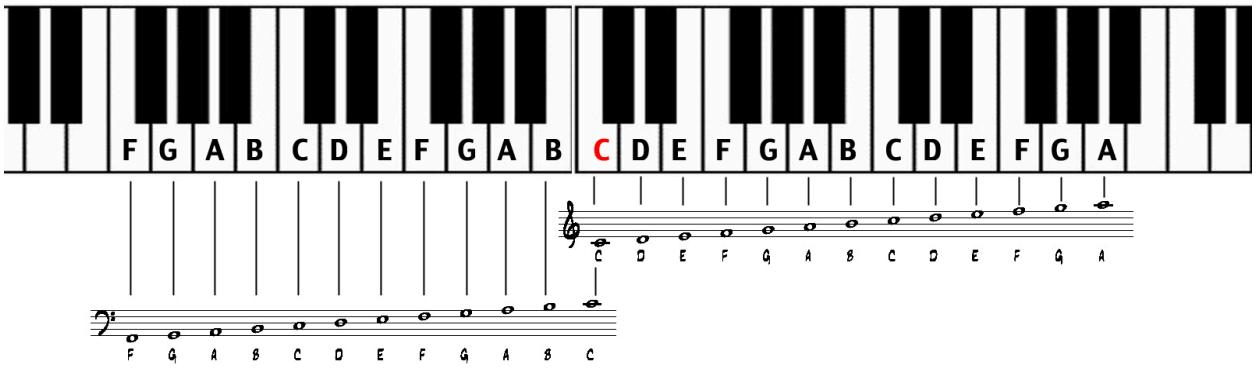
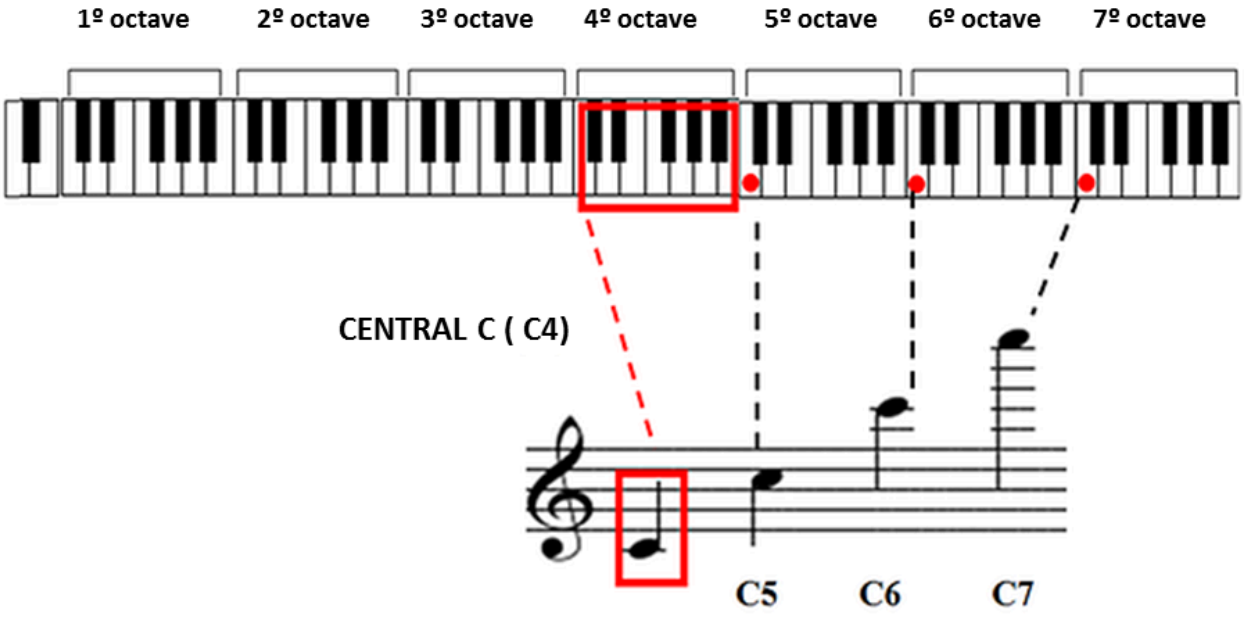
What do you need to play Piano?

In order to play any instrument, you need to have studied technique. For piano, Hanon or Schmitt exercises are used, but I know that no one wants to study these and just wants to play a Loona song. Below are some tips for playing the pieces if you have never played the piano before, and about the pieces themselves.

In case you don't know how to read:





But by the way, I left the documents with the PDFs of the piano exercises of Hanon and Schmitt in case you need to do them. And if you want to do them, you should keep the following guidelines in mind.

But these guidelines are also useful for playing the Loona songs that I will give you:

1. C4 (red) is always at the level of your heart.
2. Don't bend your knuckles, as this will make your fingers tense up so much that you'll end up hurting yourself! To prevent this from happening, try to learn slowly and carefully.
3. Your fingers should move independently of each other. Try to focus this exercise more on your pinky and ring fingers, as they are the most difficult to move independently.
4. Articulate your fingers with each note
5. And I'm serious, study VERY SLOWLY AND ARTICULATE YOUR FINGERS.

But now…

What do you need to play at level 1?

You already have these tips I gave you. BUT, you can start doing these exercises without having learned this, because this level is designed to be learned progressively. It's just a simple tip that you can follow or not. So now I'll give you a summary of what each song works on.

Song details:

Let Me In: Most of the song is diatonic and very slow. First, arpeggios are played (playing the notes of a chord one by one), and then chords are played along with the melody. The song is very diatonic (it doesn't jump around too much), so it's very simple to start with. It's perfect for learning because the song is already slow, so by using the pedal, you can add your own touch depending on your level.

The Carol: It's a good piece for understanding rhythms (especially triplets) and very easy to follow. Perhaps, if you're not very used to it, you might have difficulty reading the key changes (the key signature), but if you do it patiently and slowly, it will turn out great!

Rain 51db: Another relatively simple piece. Let's say that this song is a compilation of what was worked on in the two previous songs (but without the triplets). It is a short version of the theme, simpler and without the key change. But later I will add the full version for a more advanced level.

Tell Me Now: Here we have a jump in difficulty, so I want to say, and advise, that you only play the chord with your left hand but play the riff with your right hand. It may be more difficult because of the rhythms (which are still triplets but very fast), so I recommend doing it VERY SLOWLY. That way, the hand movements are much easier. Or you can simplify it and then add the written details later. You can simply use the first inversion of the chord (1st, 3rd, 5th) and not the version I wrote. That's up to you.
